Washington Letter.

WASHIGTON, April 8, 1895 It looks now as though the Ad ministration had won a very creditable diplomatic victory from Great Britain in that little affair of Nicaragua's seaports. Nothing offidiplomatic correspondence on this matterwithin the last few days, but there are good reasons for stating that Ambassador Bayard has been most positively assured by the British government that nothing will be done in its dealings with Nicaragua that can be properly construed into a violation of the Monroe doctrine. This assurance was naturally very gratifying to President Cleveland and the other members of the Administration. It way saying in a round-about way that Great Britain never really meant to carry out that bombarding threat, and it was also in a way of recognition of the Monroe doctrine. That this assurance from Great Britain was the result of the courageous position taken by the Administration as to the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine is certain. And nothing was lost by the knowledge on the part of Great Britain, that the United States had a sufficient back up the position assumed.

The arrival of the new Spanish minister is anxiously awaited in Washington, as it is believed that he will have several important communications to make to this government. The Allianca incident is still open. and the belief is growing that Spain is trying to play a double game in connection therewith, notwithstanding its promise to make it satisfactory as soon as it was in possession of the necessary information. As the new Spanish minister is to spend a week or ten days in Cuba before coming to Washington he will be expected to acquire all the needed information and if his government still delays making a satisfactory settlement he may find himself very disagreeably surprised soon after his arrival. And his surprise is not likely to be displeasing to the Cuban revolutionists.

Postmaster General Wilson dropped into his new duties as naturally as though he had been dealing with postal affairs all his life, and he is the same urbane gentleman in dealing with his numerous callers that he always was during his extended Congressional career.
